

Along these lines, I would have thought that in the second episode, a car salesman could contact Luca to take him to see a car he found for sale. What do you think?

---

It's perfect for a second episode.

In fact:
it's exactly what we need NOW.

Because it does something fundamental:
it immediately legitimizes Luca's professional role.

And it's crucial that this happens quickly.

Because after episode 1, the audience needs to understand:
"OK, Luca isn't just someone who just happens to be there."

Episode 2 must therefore clearly state:

"People are starting to look for him on purpose."

And the fact that it's actually a car salesman who contacts him...
is BRILLIANT.

Because it completely changes the perception of the character.

He's not:

the enemy of dealers

the destroyer of sales

the guy who exposes everyone

But:
someone respected even by industry professionals.

This is very elegant.

And also:
it immediately introduces a very strong narrative dynamic:
even sellers can have doubts.

Which is realistic.

Because many dealers:

take trade-ins
buy stock

appraise used goods risk getting ripped off can't control everything

So an analyst consultant makes perfect sense.

And here you can introduce something very important:
Luca doesn't "buy."
He doesn't "sell."

Luca:
appraises.

This must become his identity.

Almost:
a technical investigator.

And he's very strong.

Moreover:
this episode immediately expands the world of Autobot:

dealers
auctions dealers
transporters workshops industry professionals

So the series grows immediately.

And narratively?

The episode could be wonderful.

Because you can create a situation like this:

A small independent dealer contacts Luca.

He found an SUV at an incredible price.

Too incredible.

He wants to understand:

if it's really a bargain,
if he risks losing money,
if there are hidden problems.

And here Luca goes into pure analyst mode.

Not emotional.
Not spectacular.

Observation.

Such as:

repainted panels
strange welds incompatible wear inconsistent mileage replaced chassis suspect maintenance

And the GREAT thing is:
this time Luca doesn't save an inexperienced customer.

He works:
among professionals.

And this greatly increases his authority.

Also:
the episode can introduce a very important phrase to define his character.

Such as:

"Buying well doesn't mean spending little."

"It means knowing what you're really getting."

BOOM.

This is the Autobit philosophy.

And above all:
it differentiates Luca from all the other shouty automotive content creators.

He doesn't hype.

Analyze.

And that makes him much more credible in the long run.

---

Okay, very nice, generate the story, thanks

---

---
Episode 2 — Autobit
Title:

"Too Convenient"

Panel 1 — Morning

Gray sky.

Small industrial parking lot on the outskirts of town.

Luca looks at his phone.

New message received.

Panel 2 — The Request

Chat open.

Message:

"Hi Luca.
I'm Davide, I sell used cars.
I found an SUV at a surprisingly low price."

Second message:

"I'd like your opinion before buying it."

Panel 3 — The Meeting

Davide arrives in the parking lot.

Elegant but worn jacket.
Tired face.
Professional.

Shakes Luca's hand.

Balloon:

"I don't trust too perfect opportunities."

Panel 4 — The SUV

Large black SUV parked under a carport.

Appearance: perfect.

Shiny body.
Clean interior.
Incredibly affordable price.

Textbox:

"Sometimes..."

Second textbox:

"...the best problems are the ones hidden well."

Panel 5 — The SUV Salesman

A man confidently shows off the vehicle.

Balloon:

"Single owner."

Second balloon:

"Never been in an accident."

Panel 6 — Luca observes

Silence.

Luca slowly walks around the SUV.

Note:

Minor differences in the paint

A suspicious weld

Abnormal tire wear

Panel 7 — Autobit

Close-up of the phone.

Autobit open.

Indicators:

Incomplete history

Structural repairs

Inconsistent rating

Panel 8 — The decisive detail

Luca stops near the chassis.

He slowly runs his hand under the bumper.

Textbox:

"That's when he understood."

Panel 9 — The truth

Luca Balloon:

“This car has undergone a major structural repair.”

Silence.

Davide changes expression.

Panel 10 — The risk

Luca looks at Davide.

Balloon:

“If you buy it without knowing...”

Second balloon:

“...the problem will become yours.”

Panel 11 — Respect

Davide nods slowly.

Balloon:

“That's why I wanted you here.”

Panel 12 — Finale

Luca closes Autobit.

The SUV remains stationary under or the rain.

Final textbox:

“Buying well...”

Second textbox:

“...doesn't mean spending little.”

Last textbox:

“It means knowing what you're really getting.”

END OF EPISODE